

Docket No. 20-15, Comments on PVO Financial Responsibility Rulemaking

- Future Cruise Credits should not expire
 - o NCL cancelled my Mexican Riviera cruise out of LA that was originally scheduled for April 5, 2020 was cancelled by NCL March 17, 2020.
 - We received future cruise credit with a 20% bonus and a 20% discount on a future cruise in lieu of a refund.
 - o We used the future cruise credit to book a Baltic cruise that was originally scheduled for September 13, 2021 out of Copenhagen which was cancelled by NCL on April 29, 2021.
 - We paid $1,313.62 via our credit card and $6,239.06 via Future Cruise Credit from our cancelled April 2020 cruise.
 - We were refunded a total of $7,552.68 via Future Cruise Credit. Because we “accepted” a future cruise credit in lieu of a refund (which was not offered), we were ineligible for a refund.
 - o We booked a Mediterranean Cruise out of Southampton, UK scheduled for October 28, 2022.
 - We paid $1,500 via credit card (to secure the reservation). We then covered the balance of the cruise cost via Future Cruise Credit that NCL gave us in lieu of a refund.
 - We still have $2,559.04 in Future Cruise Credit available.
 - o NCL informed us that the Future Cruise Credit will need to be applied to a 2022 cruise or they will expire and we will lose the credit.
 - We have a 10 day cruise booked for October 2022 already.
 - We’re unable to book another cruise in 2022 due to limited vacation days.
 - o If a PVO issues a Future Cruise Credit, those credits should never expire.
